Stainless Steel... the Green Metal

The discovery of stainless steel which is attributed mainly to Harry Brearley working on a project to improve rifle barrels is actually the accumulated effort of several renowned scientists and took place around 1900-1915. With the introduction of stainless steel you have finally a metal that is eco-friendly, recyclable, corrosion resistant, non reactive, heat resistant, aesthetic and versatile, offering lifelong service.

An iron containing alloy, stainless steel is low carbon steel made of two or more chemical elements - (steel, chromium and nickel). The chromium content approximately 10 % is primarily what gives the metal its shine and corrosion resistance.

The Winning Properties:

Corrosion Resistant : Stainless Steel is continually protected by a passive layer of chromium oxide that forms naturally on the surface through the combination of chromium and moisture in the air. If the surface is scratched, it regenerates itself. The addition of nickel works with chromium to give it high resistance.

Eco-friendly & Safe : It's 100% recyclable and 50% actually is manufactured from scrap. The production of stainless steel leaves a very low carbon foot print. Also unlike other materials it does not leach any carcinogenic or toxic chemicals or metallic substance. Hence this versatile metal finds usage in multi products and is a healthy and safe alternative.

Safest for Re-use : As drinking water bottles and food containers unlike plastic which is reported to leach harmful BPA that supposedly increase risk of obesity, thyroid, some types of cancer etc.

Hygienic : Non-porous surface so does not lodge any bacteria or germs, makes it ideal choice for hospitals and food industry.

Easy to Clean : Requires very little detergent hence effluent has less toxic load.

Non Reactive : Does not affect flavor as no reaction with acidic foods during preparation.

Heat stability : Can handle extreme temperatures which allow it to go from the stove to a cold dishwasher or sink.

Non Toxic : Unlike aluminum, stainless steel does not leach metallic substances in harmful quantities.

High durability : Does not chip or have any coating that comes off with repeated usage.
